Friday after Friday, we find ourselves tied to yet another Shabbat dinner with family. And while we enjoy Aunt Esther's drunken ramblings, we can't help thinking what cute boys we might be meeting if we weren't held up on the UWS. We suspect that Robert J. Saferstein shares a similar sentiment. With the promotional help of He'Bro creator Jayson Littman, the Mayor of Gay Jews in NYC, Saferstein is introducing Friday Night Lights, his new series of sophisticated gay Shabbat dinners.

Focused toward the modern gay Jewish man, Friday Night Lights is a blend of salon-style gathering and urban dining, elevating the traditional Shabbat dinner to something even more fabulous. The evening includes a cocktail hour and a sit-down dinner with carefully-crafted seasonal Kosher selections, along with wine and cocktail pairings. Add to that delightful conversation with other young Jewish gay professionals, and you have a recipe for a great Friday Night.

Who knows, you may even leave with a hot new date. And to think, you will finally be able to say to your mother, "Yes, he's Jewish!"
